

Marietta, OH

V-VI

Jan. 23, 1812

Western Spectator
Jan. 26, 1812

EARTHQUAKE AGAIN

On the morning of Thursday the 23rd instant we again experienced the shock of an earthquake, which continued we believe about 4 minutes. The sensations it occasioned were similar to those felt in the former shocks; of which it was well remarked by the Lancaster Press that they resembled those arising from the rolling of a ship. We believe this shock was little less violent than the first and severest on the 16th utl. The printing stands reeled violently and a gentleman in the office heard a rumbling noise which caused him to look round just at the commencement of the shock.